VERSE1

Buying local and community, prevailing culture's gone to mono.
Attitude to think on, buying from the land,
warrant for the peace of the hard workin' hand.
Eats off the vine, earth of his plot,
sworn off the grid, pulled out the plug.
She's dropped from the dopeline, headed for the treeline.
They made their way to island and the system they abhor.
Their arms are feeling weary. Their skin is sun and tan.
The sweat is all the product, - what they carry in their hand.
There is no fuckin' government, there is no more a tax.
There is no day off, babe, there is no slack.
Yeah, let them get the freedom and backin' our community.
They're all of human endeavour, they're workin' for the many.

B major

chorus B, F#

CHORUS2

VERSE2

He digs in the compost, and digs his own shit, for a soil rich in ingredients.
Makes her garden, grows her very own food, rooftop desperate thought of green, makes an urban dream.

VERSE3

The weeds will grow up, through the cracks once again.
All things genetic modified will never win.
After every fat economist is shredded and stung, the perfect nutrients for trees and the green ones.

CHORUS4

VERSE4

Every fabrication, need a recycling, otherwise the Earth will never survive.
A tree down for a dollar is a dollar for a seedling,
Species from a planet is a ritual killing.

CHORUS5

Buyin' local is the only thing. What kills our culture is the labeling.
Buy from locals, do your own thing, grow your own food and write your songs to sing.

OUTRO

You're pulling the plug. You pull out the plug.
Analog revolution.

The saviour of the world is in everyone of us in a self-sustaining, analog, back-woods. E, F#, B
